

To Protect Life, Limbs, And Trees

Arborists offer tips in wake of storm

By Heather Dubin | September 8, 2011 - 1:05pm

Tropical Storm Irene left many trees in her wake when she ran across the South Fork on Aug. 28. While the damage could have been far worse, arborists have been quite busy since then tackling all the cleanup.

There is no way to compete with Mother Nature, especially when you are up against 60 to 70-mile-per-hour winds, but some local tree-care specialists have offered a few tips for protecting your property next time around.

Prevention and awareness are half the battle.

You must be a registered user of easthamptonstar.com to read articles that are more than four weeks old.

Login here.

Register here.

About the Author

Heather Dubin

RELATED TERMS: News